Faculty Senate denounces booklet

By MIKE ROEGER

Editor-In-Chief
The Fort Wayne Faculty Senate has denounced the booklet, "Giulii: The First Five Years," saying it was an embarrassment to the university.

The booklet was published in September by Community Relations as a memo to Chancellor Joseph P. Giulii. Giulii is currently on a leave of absence from IPFW to gather information to present to Congress for the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act of 1965. The act expires Sept. 30, 1985. The cost of the booklet was $1,485.

Marc Lipman, associate professor of mathematics and author of a non-biographical denouncing the booklet, said he talked to Rosemary Steiner, assistant director of community relations. He said Steiner told him the booklet was "inadequate," Giulii said he had to choose the photos. The resolution passed unanimously on a voice vote.

Giulii had told The Communicator the booklet was done as a public relations tool of the university. Lipman's resolution said the booklet contained many inaccuracies and it shouldn't have been designated an official publication.

Michael Downs, speaker of the Indiana University faculty, pointed to three inaccuracies in the booklet. The booklet implied Giulii started computerized registration. Downs said registration was completed in 1977, while Giulii began his position at IPFW in 1979.

The booklet gave Giulii credit for starting Weekend College. Downs said Dwight Henderson, acting chancellor prior to Giulii's arrival, implemented Weekend College, even though the first class wasn't started until after Giulii arrived at IPFW.

The booklet said Giulii started IPFW's involvement in the national student exchange program. Downs said the program was started before Giulii arrived.

"If the publication is supposed to be a historical record," Downs said, "it's distorted and needs to be retracted. (The booklet) should have been a curriculum vitae."

A curriculum vitae is a short biography or autobiography.

Harris asks for lobbying effort

By CHRISTINA MERCER

Staff writer
Tom Harris, former student body president, has asked the IPFW Student Senate to begin an awareness program for lobbying effort to get the proposed Fine Arts Center built.

Harris said the $9.5 million project has been broken down into two phases. The first phase would be an educational wing costing $4.5 million. The second phase would be an auditorium and gallery. The first phase would replace the downtown facilities.

The fine arts buildings downtown on Berry Street are "inadequate," said Russell Eitel, chairman of the fine arts department.

The proposal was recently turned down by the commission of higher education.

"We are disappointed but will not give up hope," said John Caranapi, vice chancellor for financial affairs. Caranapi said IPFW has been successful before without the approval of the higher education commission.

The proposal must be approved by the General Assembly. It will be tough to convince the legislature to approve the fine arts building without the commission's approval, Caranapi said.

Biology organization forms

Sigma Xi, a national organization that encourages research in the pure and applied natural sciences, was installed at IPFW Nov. 8. Patricia Faber of Briant College, Lake Forest, Ill., the national president of Sigma Xi, was the installing officer. The Fort Wayne chapter of Sigma Xi is the newest of about 500 clubs and chapters across North America, with its charter membership drawn from researchers in science at IPFW and the Fort Wayne area. Members' research includes the physical sciences, medical sciences, mathematics and engineering. Sigma Xi is also concerned with the relationship between a natural science and the social sciences and humanities, and with the effect of scientific research on society. More than 120,000 scientists belong to Sigma Xi nationally.

Guthrie given job

Thomas L. Guthrie, associate professor of business administration, has been named director of the Office of Community and Institutional Relations, Edward A. Nicholson, acting chancellor announced. Guthrie will be responsible for statistical studies of enrollment patterns, demographic changes in the population and enrollment forecasts. The data collected will be used in recruiting and retention efforts by IPFW.

Bright stars Nov. 25

The three brightest objects in the November sky will come together this evening of Nov. 25 to form a striking trio. Indiana University astronomers said. About 45 minutes after sunset, Venus, Jupiter and the crescent moon will be clustered low in the southwest. Venus will be the left of Jupiter, with the moon slightly below.

All three objects will fit into the field of view of a 35-mm camera equipped with a standard lens of about 50 mm focal length. The camera should be mounted on a tripod to prevent blurring. A fast lens speed of f/1.2 to f/8 and high-speed film will be needed. To avoid overexposing the sky, it will be best to wait until deep twilight about an hour after sunset, and take short exposures of about 1/30 to 1/60 seconds.

Club sponsors potluck

The International Students Organization is sponsoring a Thanksgiving ethnic potluck Sunday in the Green Room of the Port in the Walb Memorial Union at 5 p.m. Admissions $1 for club members and $2 for non-members. Because of limited space, people who are not admitted. Persons interested should contact Mary B. Brand, director of activities, at room 116 of the Walb Memorial Union.

Host sought for holiday

Mary B. Brand, director of activities, has asked the IPFW community to invite international students into their homes for Thanksgiving dinner. Anyone interested in hosting an international student for dinner may contact Brand in room 116 of the Walb Memorial Union.

Usman to speak Nov. 26

Sushil K. Usman, associate professor of sociology, will speak to the International Student Organization Nov. 26 at noon in the Fairchild Room of the Walb Memorial Union on the challenges of foreign students.

Volleyball tourney planned

IPFW is planning an intramural coed volleyball tournament Dec. 4 to the Multipurpose Building. Any one interested should sign up on the Intramural board on the first floor of the Multipurpose Building.

The Communicator will not be published next Thursday because of Thanksgiving. The Communicator will return to the newsstand Nov. 29.

Elevators shut down during fires

By MELISSA CONTADILLA

Chief reporter
Last Wednesday normal routines in the Classroom and Medical Building came to a halt as the fire alarm sounded. Following emergency procedures, staff, faculty and students began to evacuate the building.

However, stop for a moment and think about being in a building with more than one level and being unable to leave the stairs also can't use the elevator to help them get out of a building.

In an emergency situation, IPFW developed automatically return to home base landing and remain there, said Don Kallier, director of the physical plant. So, people who can't leave the stairs also can't use the elevator to help them get out of a building.

Fortunately, the alarm on Wednesday was a false one. According to University Police and Safety department, the alarm was accidentally set off by a young child in the arms of an adult. The way out of the building, the child apparently grabbed the fire alarm, police said.

Even though there wasn't a fire, the accidental alarm can serve as a reminder people with disabilities do need assistance, especially in an emergency.

Debra Fremuth, disabled student services counselor, said the IPFW emergency plan and procedures brochure, distributed by the vice chancellor for financial affairs, is a good source of information on the emergency situation. She said the policy states assistance must be rendered to those in need.

Aside from the policy brochure provided to faculty and staff, evacuation instructions are posted in each classroom on campus.

"In elevator it was a death trap," said Port Wayne Fire Marshal Tom Loraine. Stairwells are often smoldered from flames and, if possible, people with disabilities should wait there for help.

"My best advice is have a friend," said Loraine. "It pays to have someone to help you."

IPFW volleyball player Courtney Saylor shows a surge of happiness during one of the Mastodon's games at the Great Lakes Valley Conference Tournament. The volleyball team took the championship with a 15-4, 15-4, 15-3 victory over

Counseling services available

By JENNIFER ACKLEY

Chief reporter
Personal counseling at IPFW is more than just finding answers to the questions of how to deal with stress and how to cope with anxiety.

Several resources for personal counseling are available at IPFW. Vivian Hernandez, a psychologist from Park Center, is available on a part-time basis for all students. Working with short-term, goal-oriented therapy, Hernandez is presently seeing about thirty students.

"The problems that I deal with are mostly relationship problems and stress-related problems of depression," she said.

One technique Hernandez uses is progressive relaxation which teaches people to relax and, therefore, to deal with the pressures of stress more effectively.

In conjunction with Campus Ministry, a women's group dealing with self-concept and assertiveness, was offered by Hernandez and Margaret McCray-Worrall.

The group, which will meet again in the spring, "provides an opportunity for women to get together with other women students in a small intimate atmosphere to discuss the problems involved with being a student and personal," said Worrall.

The group also focuses on developing skills necessary in interacting with other people. In the future, Hernandez hopes to offer a workshop centering around eating disorders, such as anorexia and bulimia. An extension of personal counseling is pastoral counseling, which involves spiritual strengthening.

"Very often, a student on a campus such as IPFW feels overwhelmed by responsibilities — job, family, school work — and may find themselves in a crisis situation, where things seem to be falling apart," said McCray-Worrall.

McCray-Worrall spends most of her time at IPFW, although she also has an office at Indiana Institute of Technology and is available to St. Francis College, RV Tech and International Business College.

Father Larry Kramer, pastor of Our Lady of Good Hope Parish also provides counseling as a referral to Catholic students.

John Utner, dean of student services, is another resource at IPFW for personal counseling. Utner, who has a doctorate in education, will be making counseling done "an awful lot of listening" while helping students cope and make adjustments with their lives.

The most common problems he deals with are the stresses caused by job, school, and family — relationships from these between students and their parents to those between husbands and wives — and some type of modern personality disorders.

Utner is an advocate for the student and, as a result, sees many students who "are frustrated with the bureaucracy of the system" and tries to resolve legitimate concerns. Debbie Fremuth, disabled student services counselor, is available to all handicapped students who have personal problems or simply want to talk.

For all university employees and their families, IPFW also sponsors an Employee Assistance Program. This program is designed to deal with human problems — the kind that affect an employee's personal well-being and his/her ability to perform on the job. These problems may include marital difficulties, financial problems, emotional problems, emotional difficulties, or problems caused by alcohol or other drug abuse. Employee assistance counselors, Greg Arnold, Kathleen Schreck and Michael Miller are accessible through Park Center.

All personal counseling services at IPFW are free of charge and confidential. Referrals are often made to Park Center, a community counseling center. It has extended facilities and services which enable it to deal with problems such as drug and alcohol abuse and service personality disorders.

Guisti may leave IPFW

In this space several weeks ago, we wrote that what was going on concerning the leave of absence taken by Chancellor Joseph P. Guisti.

Two days' impression Guisti was looking for another job when the booklet, "Guisti: The First Five Years," was published. He said it was published as a public relations tool for IPFW.

He responded to the editorial with a telephone call to The Communicator office. He talked about his job and the information concerning the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act of 1965. He said he wanted to be part of making history.

Guisti had said his present and future would be with IPFW.

Today, Guisti is in consideration for the presidency at Eastern Kentucky University. He is one of three finalists for the job. If he is elected by the Eastern Kentucky Board of Regents, he will be expected to start his new job in January.

Guisti had to have applied for the EKU job sometime during the summer, an Eastern Kentucky spokesman said. It he was looking for a new job, why didn't Guisti tell anyone that when he began his leave of absence?

If Guisti resigns as chancellor within the next month to begin a new job in Indiana, he doesn't leave much time for James and Purdue universities to find a replacement.

If Guisti doesn't plan to return, why then did he say his future is IPFW, when his future may be Eastern Kentucky? Guisti seems to go out of his way to promote the IPFW image. If he is serious about IPFW's image, why not tell the truth about his plans?

The Guisti booklet appears, not to be a promotion of IPFW, but a promotion of Joseph P. Guisti—a glorified resume. The Fort Wayne Faculty Senate has denounced the booklet as an embarrassment to IPFW because it contained numerous inaccuracies and misstatements.

Chancellor Guisti, let's be straightforward.

Writer has power to predict

I don't want to gloat, but remember in the space as long as two months ago it was predicted that Ronald Reagan would win the election.

Rather than just the horde of so-called political writers who rely on the polls, I predicted the victory through the special poll in sight which is more alive.

In all modesty—dare I remind everyone that, yes, even in the final days of the campaign I had the courage to suggest that the Mondale-Ferraro ticket could be in trouble.

Let's face it, what's happened in all about Fox have the victim which is quite frankly mine to see beyond the mainstream.

Mondale's landslide.

Now that the economy is booming, why not take the vacuum of a lifetime and make a reservation on the space shuttle to the District of Columbia?

The District of Columbia or the Detached Colony hangs like a noose in the Mondale landslide is about as remote as you can get—if you don't count Pluto.

You remember on election night the networks had a big map of the U.S. with the Reagan states in red and the Mondale states in blue. And the blue was little D.C. blinking out and off, signaling "No day, Monday."

As we say in Washington, D.C., we're in touch—with Missouri.

Zaccaro happy

I don't know who looked for the Mondale defeat, Ronald Reagan, or John Zaccaro—or was it Gary Hart?

In the post-election return to normalcy, everyone is getting on with their lives—including the Zaccaro.

Mark Russell

Telephones

The studies are putting telephones in the planes. What with being jugged, overcrowding the schedule and rubberizing the food, you wonder how they find the time.

Attention, infrequent air travelers—on the holidays approach, mail your luggage to your relatives now. Otherwise, whatever clothing you want to see again, wait.

Democratic strategy

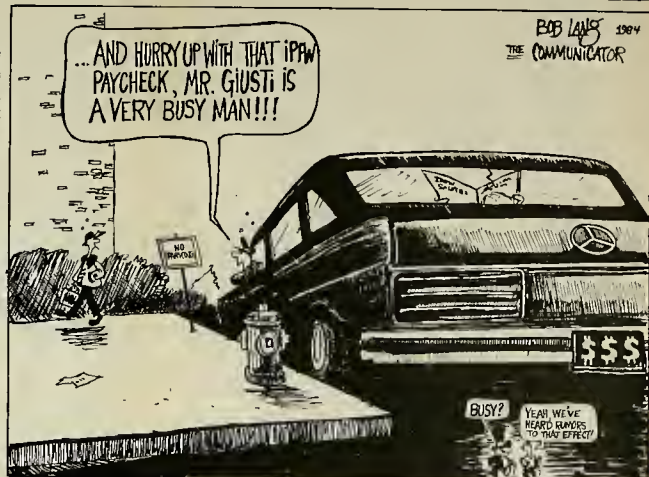

The Democrats strategy for the future will be a delicate one—you start with Minnesota and the District of Columbia and you allow the momentum to local down.

The message of the people is finally dawning on the Democratic leadership. Tip O'Neill just called Ted Kennedy and said, "Ted, you better sit down for this—It's too difficult."

The Democrats will build for tomorrow by combining a new realignment with old party traditions. The main focus will be on black country clubs.

No more New Deal, Fair Deal, Camelot or Great Society. From now on it will be the new, Andre, Forward Looking, Pragmatic Democratic Party. A party whose war cry will be—"Dumpy Nixon."

Time to organize for funding Fine Arts Center

Letter

Well, the elections are over and as far as IPFW is concerned, it's time to get to work.

Our job is to organize a massive attempt to convince the General Assembly that IPFW, Fort Wayne and northeastern Indiana deserve funding for a new Fine Arts Academic Building of IPFW.

I will ask the Students' Governments—Legislative Affairs Committee to begin an attempt on behalf of the students to orchestrate a lobbying effort in cooperation with the plans already organized by the IPFW administration to contact our state representatives on this issue.

As students, we can be heard and should be involved in this process. We can begin the process by asking our Student Senate to adopt a resolution in favor of this project.

Secondly, students' project should involve the 10,000 IPFW students in a letter writing campaign aimed at our state representatives.

As a Radio-TV-Film major, I was very upset when I saw the list of classes offered in the spring schedule. I was hoping to take COM 281 (Intro to Electronic Mass Media), but it is not offered. This seems odd to me because COM 281 is a prerequisite for COM 291, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, and 336 (film production classes). These classes are prerequisites for COM 401, 413, and 415 (radio, TV, and film practices).

In my COM 291 class, eleven other COM majors signed a paper stating that they would take the class if it was offered. Out of a class of less than forty people, eleven is a rather large percentage. I am sure many more Radio-TV-Film majors would take the class if it was offered. Because it is not offered, myself and other COM majors are being left out of the summer, or we must wait until next fall. This seems unfair to me because of the large number of Radio-TV-Film majors in this campus. If the class is offered, enough students would sign up to take the University would not lose money, since this is their major concern.

Secondly, I want to thank the staff writers who contributed to the issue. Jennifer Akeley, Brad Berggren, Angela Hays, Christine Mercer, Tom Rice, Doug Runyan, Michael Shaffer, Carolyn Swann and Denise VanOrt.

Thirdly, I want to thank Pauline Munberger at the IPFW archives and Elmer Denham at the Learning Resource Center. These two assisted us in our research and in copying and photographing of events from 20 years ago.

Finally I want to thank the people who took the time to read and sold everyone on the idea of a joint campus of Indiana and Purdue universities at Fort Wayne.

the state. As this region grows our educational needs grow too.

Let's continue to encourage our state representatives as well as the Fort Wayne community that we too, as students are working toward this goal.

During the next few weeks you will see more information regarding on this issue. I ask you to take an interest in this subject so you can be a part of this campaign to make IPFW the first complete campus in this state, and more importantly, provide adequate learning facilities for those students in the arts department.

We can convince the state legislature to appropriate funding for this project, but it will take combined effort between the administration and the state of Indiana.

We can do it, we've done it before.

Typewriter returned late

To the Editor:

In January 1984 Students' Government purchased five electric typewriters with Student Activity Fee. They were placed in the Helmer Library with the borrowed by Students' Government.

On July 24, 1984 Students' Government borrowed two electric typewriters. One was returned in September.

The typewriter was notified by phone the many times in person. The typewriter was brought back on Friday, Nov. 2.

Until that time the library had four electric typewriters available for IPFW students.

Are bought research papers worth their money?

By JOHN COOK
Staff Writer

Using mail-order term paper companies as a means of taking off the pressure at mid-term is one way to go for $5 or $6 a page. How's that?

The College Heights Herald of Western Kentucky University conducted an experiment by ordering two term papers from Auburn's Research Services, Inc., a "professional research and writing service," based in Chicago.

Nine professors graded the papers. The grades were not satisfactory. The Herald reported an English paper on Hemingway's novel, "The Sun Also Rises," received three F's for content. The paper was written on headed paper. "A Farewell to Arms," and "The Sun Also Rises." Factual errors and a lack of specific details also contributed to the low grade. This paper cost $28.50.

When contacted about the poor quality of the paper, a spokesman for Auburn's Research Services apologized and sent a second paper free of charge.

The Herald also reported that the history department received a term paper. Their cost $50.00. Likewise, the grades were poor with a C-, a D- and two D's.

The Herald said one professor wrote, "I would give this paper a D+ for particularly tacky, a D-minus, minus, minus, minus. It was a curious mixture of pseudo-sophistication."

Purchasing term papers from agencies in this business is not regularly practiced at IPFW. John P. Ulmer, Associate Professor of Education and Dean of Student Services, said most students probably don't know about such services and are not willing to pay high prices for these papers.

W. J. Wilson, assistant professor of psychology, said the practice of buying term papers is clearly wrong and unethical for two reasons.

"First, people are at college for an education, and second, this is unfair to other students especially if the class is graded on a curve." Wilson, along with Ulmer, said buying term papers falls under the same category as plagiarism. The student handbook for IPFW clearly states that academic dishonesty must not be tolerated.

Trustee discuss tuition at IPFW

By MIKE ROEGER
Editor-in-Chief

Students can expect a 6 percent tuition increase, Indiana University President John Ryan told the IU Board of Trustees Saturday.

The trustees met at IPFW in the Wall Memorial Union. The bulk of the increase will be used, Ryan said, to improve faculty and staff salaries. Indiana and Purdue faculty are among the lowest paid in the Big Ten Conference.

The board of trustees will make final approval for fee increases for all campuses within the Indiana University system, except IPFW. Purdue University is the fiscal agent for IPFW and its board of trustees enacts any increases.

Ryan's projection of a 6 percent tuition increase was based on recommendations by the state Higher Education Commission. The HEC approved an increase of $8.9 million for faculty salaries.

"Yao can't raise faculty salaries at the expense of students," Gorney told the trustees. "We're pricing people out of higher education."

Gorney also asked the trustees to consider a reevaluation of how lab fees are assessed.

In other business, Kenneth Balthaser, director of the Learning Resource Center, was given the additional title of acting director of the library, retroactive to Oct. 1, until June 30, 1985.

Give the gift of music.

Janice Furrier, a 1989 graduate of vocal music, is the newly appointed Director of Music at WBNI, Fort Wayne's public radio station.

Music graduate directs at WBNI radio

By DIANA HAWFIELD

Staff Writer

Janice Furrier has recently assumed the duties of Music Director for WBNI, Fort Wayne's public radio station. Her responsibilities include the supervision and scheduling of all air announcements and the maintenance and acquisition of recordings for the station library. She will also be focusing on the improvement of the on-air sound of the station.

Furrier moved with her family to Berne, Indiana from Costa Mesa, California in 1973. Seven years later she graduated from IPFW with a bachelor's degree in vocal music. She said that in additional time spent in obtaining the degree was valuable because it enabled her to take full advantage of the wide variety of academic offerings at the university.

In addition to her music classes and the standard liberal arts curriculum, she also sampled several languages, art history and geology, which she found fascinating.

She feels that both her musical and liberal arts training here have stood her in very good stead as she pursues her career. In particular, she values the close relationships with the faculty which she has maintained even after graduation.

In addition to a solid foundation of history, theory and repertoire, they imbued me with enthusiasm for learning and education," she said.

Enthusiasm is certainly the correct word to describe this woman, who glowed when she spoke about music, art, radio and what she feels to be her educational mission in public radio.

Furrier said that is a great deal in the area of music that would enrich people's lives if they could hear it and learn to appreciate it. But that process need not be either elitist or dull. Variety is the key.

"You might tune in to the station this week and hear something that fits perfectly with your current mood, while next week that space will be filled with something entirely different, but still entirely appropriate. As we go through our life's changes, our musical needs are also changing."

Furrier did not take any classes in radio or other media, but rather supplemented her musical and liberal arts training in those areas by doing volunteer work at WBNI. For two and a half years she was the on-air host of "The Record Shelf" and two other programs. The campus station later became WBNI.

After a year in Vienna studying voice in Germany, she spent a year and a half in the morning show of WJLA, an FM station in Champagne-Urbana, Illinois.

Her last position was at WNED in Buffalo, New York, doing a morning show six days a week and successfully elevating the station's listener numbers.

She said she learned a great deal there, but the high-powered nature of the job left her little time to pursue her numerous other interests.

She maintains an active life away from the station, as a vocal performer, weaver, and artist. In Berne she has directed pageants for Swiss Days, taught Swiss folk songs and dances to the Swiss descendants in the area and helped them to recall their heritage.

"Radio is a twenty-four hour job," she said. "You're always thinking about and planning for it, whether you're at the office or not." She feels that her other interests give her the opportunity to "de-stress."

WBNI now employs nine paid staff people, two of whom are women. The remainder of the work load in their Wells Street YWCA headquarters is handled by approximately 70 volunteers.

A large part of Furrier's job will be to coordinate the efforts of the on-air volunteers.

When asked about the future, she looked balefully at the pile of work on her desk, built up over the five-month period that her position was vacant.

"First I have to get through that," she said, "and then," indicating a formidable stack of records next to her chair, "I think that one keeps changing, so by the time a decision comes along, it's pretty well been decided for me. The choices already made. Oh, and I just bought a harp!"

PIT presents "Agnes of God" by John Pflieger and directed by Larry L. Life tomorrow, Nov. 17, 23, 24, 25, 30 and Dec. 1. Appearing in the play are Donna Blackburn as Mother Miriam Ruth, Janet Gabes as Dr. North Livingstone and Anne Beresford-Clarke as Sister Agnes.

Beresford-Clarke debuts at PIT as 'Agnes'

by JENNIFER BLONK
Purdue-Indiana Theatre winter production, "Agnes of God," opens tomorrow at 8 p.m. Loosely based on the true story of a nun who was raped, who bore a baby and then murdered it, the play's opening culminates in a two year try by director Larry L.

Life to bring it to the PIT stage. "When I first saw the play in New York I loved it," Life said. The understudy had replaced Amanda Plummer in the lead role and Life felt the play did not work around her.

"I avoided the play at first. But something about it intrigued me so I got a copy, read it and found it was a really excellent play."

Even though the play had a murder-mystery billing in New York, Life did not see the play being performed as such. "This is not a case of a crazy, demented nun. It is not my interpretation," Life said.

"It's a play that leaves people with a lot of questions about miracles, about the possibility of miracles in our lives and about special people. The audience has to care and love Agnes," he explained.

Anne Beresford-Clarke makes her debut at PIT as Agnes Beresford-Clarke was last seen at First Presbyterian Theatre in "Hedda Gabler" and "The Diviners."

Janet Gabes, portraying Dr. Miriam Ruth, is seen in PIT's production of "The Importance of Being Earnest," plays the Mother Superior

Added to the production of "Agnes of God" are three environmental nuts: Myra McFarland, Kris Fitzgerald and Lynn Pauline Hughes.

Not called for in the original script, Life presents them "as a visual misdeed of the dramatic statement of the play, to give a sense of current living and to open up the intense moments of the show."

"Agnes of God" runs Nov. 16-17, 23-24, 29-30 Dec. 1. Tickets are $5 for general admission, $4 for senior citizens and $3 for students with activity cards.

Squire, Ratt sell out

By CAROLYN SUWYN
Staff Writer

The double bill of Billy Squire and Ratt that they played the sold out Coliseum last Thursday night drew a crowd that was light on leather, heavy on females and a little younger than one might expect.

There seems to be a trend that is creating a new crowd of hard rock audiences, a crowd that likes hard rock just short of heavy metal.

A near majority of the crowd came to see Ratt, which has grown popular because of their MTV exposure. Ratt played the highlights of its last top ten album "Out of the Cellar," with an abundance of onstage energy. With the audience on its feet for the entire forty-five minutes they enjoyed the encore "Round and Round" backed to come to see Ratt. As Ratt said goodbye they promised to be back next year.

Squire appeared on stage to a re-energized crowd in jeans and a Billy Squire tee-shirt. The crowd showed considerable enthusiasm. He sang from his last three albums, did a little dancing and played his guitar a little more than he usually does.

He seemed to get fired up when he sang "The Striker," crawled about the floor a bit, and then his energy seemed to wane. Squire didn't make much use of his hired tiered stage. The three encore numbers were songs that the crowd had been waiting for all night long.

Alumna wins business award

By MELISSA CANTADILLI
Staff Writer

Persistence and determination are qualities that IPFW alumna Linda Kanyah refers to when she talks about her career path and accomplishments.

"I want to be somebody—make my own mark as a woman and as an individual," said Kanyah. "I have had great teachers."

Kanyah has driven for success and attained it. She is acting director of the Fort Wayne Urban Justice Center and has recently earned the distinction of the American Business Women's Association Woman of the Year for the Meridian Chapter.

More than 11,000 members of the American Business Women's Association are potential candidates for the annual Woman of the Year award. The 2,000 ABWA chapters vote and each chapter elects an individual candidate.

Selection is based on the following qualifications: education, civic involvement, employment and ABWA participation.

A panel of independent judges then narrows the national award nominees to ten finalists. These ten proceed through interviews with the judges and the top ten are singled out for the award. Kanyah says to be in the top ten is a great achievement.

"(The award) made me feel really good," she said. "We (the finalists) were honored unbelievably."

Kanyah has worked hard to attain her ample qualifications for the award she has received.

She began, 13 years ago at age 20, to study criminal justice at IPFW. At the time, she had two small children and a husband who wasn't thrilled with the idea of his wife going back to school. He wondered why any woman would want to work in the criminal justice system, Kanyah said.

She knew that work and a job would be part of her life. So, Kanyah sought an education on which to build a career.

"I found out I loved college and criminal justice," she said. "There were a lot of older students out there just like me, setting goals, plugging away. I was determined to get my degree."

Two and a half years later she had her associate's degree in criminal justice from IPFW. To receive her husband's Kanyah commuted to IUPUI.

She called the commuting "a rough grind," but all she felt continued to make the daily list and hold three jobs. Two of the jobs were part-time waitress and floral designer. The third was a vacation position in the criminal justice field.

After receiving her bachelor's, Kanyah started her job in May 1979 with the Department of Corrections at the Fort Wayne Work Release Center. She said she was the first female in the male minimum security facility. As a woman in a non-traditional job, she recalled finding "very blatant discrimination" in the beginning.

"I wasn't going to let them drive me away," Kanyah said. "I was going to succeed."

Since joining the ABWA in 1979 Kanyah has worked with other professional women. "It has helped me to develop leadership skills and network. It gave me the opportunity to learn."

Kanyah's civic involvement includes being current president of the American Cancer Society, working for United Way, teaching project business for Junior Achievement.

"I really believe in volunteerism," Kanyah said. "It has tremendously helped me."

person and vice chairman (or her political party).

Through her volunteer work, Kanyah said she was able to learn and demonstrate her management skills.

business world should "get as much education as you can. Find ways to volunteer, get your foot in the door and show why you can do."

For women entering a non-traditional field, Kanyah said, "A thick skin" is helpful.

"If they (those established) can't attack you professionally, they'll attack you personally."

Course helps with stress

By DOUG HUNYAN
Chief Reporter

For most students, college can be a stressful experience. The pressure of studying for too frequent tests and writing papers the night before they are due can make the college years difficult to handle.

At IPFW, however, there is a class specifically designed to teach students and others how to recognize when stress is adversely affecting their health.

The class, wellness and stress management, has proven to be one of the most popular offerings on campus. The course is taught in four units with a different instructor for each section. There is one instructor each from the departments of supervision, nursing, mental health technology and consumer and family sciences.

Diane Liverance, one of the four instructors, said the goal of the course is to teach those who take the class to be better in touch with their bodies and learn when they have stress. Through this awareness the student can learn to live life to the fullest by learning skills in self-care, she said.

Liverance said students recently enrolled in the class represent every academic major offered on campus.

She credits the popularity of the class with its regulation with students. Students in this class often become good friends. They have a real good time and some of the class members have because of this class," said Liverance.

The instructors try to make the students aware that stress can lead to poor health. Wellness is a state of mind as well as body, said Liverance.

"Most people could live until they are 150 but most don't feel good enough to do it," Liverance said. "We try to teach people to be healthy and happy."

Liverance teaches her portion of the class by using small groups for discussion. This allows students to be more relaxed and willing to share their feelings.

In addition, Liverance plays tapes of relaxing music throughout the class period. She said people are constantly surrounded by noise and it is better to select what music is heard. Music that is relaxing can decrease stress. This is something that employers need to realize so that their employees can reduce stress, said Liverance.

The work in the class is mainly reaction-oriented, said Liverance. Instead of tests from lecture notes, students write short papers which express how they feel about the topics discussed.

"Students do a lot of work—writing, etc.," Liverance said. "It is more oriented to their personal routines. If you do the work, you get the points."

Students set specific goals for their wellness and work toward these goals. They do a class project or a collage which reflects themselves and what they are willing to share with others.

Some of the class projects in the past have included teaching the class sign language, singing, or playing an air guitar. Some students have been more health oriented, such as as instruction to aerobic dancing and weight lifting.

Because of the type of class work that is involved, some students think the class will be easy. This doesn't worry Liverance.

"Some people look at the class hoping for an easy 'A,' but have gotten a lot out of it anyway from hearing what is said in class," said Liverance.

Senior philosophy major David Walker, who is enrolled in the Saturday morning class, said he took the class so he could relax something easy and relaxing. He says that the class and the work is easy but students learn to communicate from the course.

"The students are calm and relaxed and things are different in this class as they are not talked about in other classes. It gives me a different perspective on things that I have gotten from my philosophy classes," said Walker.

"I took the class because I needed stress management," said senior Brad Ketchum from the communication and drama department. "I have a problem with letting stress get the best of me. The class has helped me to come up with better ways of how to deal with stress. I can see why it's one of the most popular classes on campus."

Walker also suggested that freshmen could benefit from taking the class to orient them to college.

"Freshmen would enjoy taking this course," said Walker. "It could relax them at the university setting. The class would be helpful in getting over the feeling of being away from home by college," said Walker.

84-85 critical for men's basketball

By BRAD BERGGOETZ

Staff Writer
With four starters returning from last season, two of them the top scorers for the team, the IPFW men's basketball team enters its first season of the IPFW volleyball tournament.

The volleyball finals begin at 7 p.m. followed by the basketball game at 8:30 p.m. IPFW's regular season play begins at home — Nov. 20 against Albion.

Conference favorites are GLVC champion Kentucky Wesleyan, Bellarmine and Lewis.

Teams outside the conference that could give the Mastodons problems are 1982 national champion Wright State.

The Mastodons will open the season with an exhibition game against Waterloo, a team from Canada, Nov. 17. The exhibition game will coincide with the finals of the IPFW volleyball tournament.

The volleyball finals begin at 7 p.m. followed by the basketball game at 8:30 p.m. IPFW's regular season play begins at home — Nov. 20 against Albion.

Conference favorites are GLVC champion Kentucky Wesleyan, Bellarmine and Lewis.

Teams outside the conference that could give the Mastodons problems are 1982 national champion Wright State.

One of IPFW's biggest victories was last year's defeat of the eventual national champions if it was one of Wright State's few losses in 1982. Other teams that might be tough are Kentucky State and Hillsdale.

Four starters are returning from last year's team. Two of them were last year's leading scorers.

Jeff Faller (44.1) averaged over 18 points per game and led the team in scoring. He also pulled down an average of 4.8 rebounds per game.

Followed by the Mastodons to 17 victories in their last 22 games.

Last year's most valuable player, Mark Cook is also returning.

Cook (6'2", 160) averaged over 15 points per game and led the team with 15 blocked shots and 41 steals.

Other returning starters this year are Jeff Nissen (6'7", 220) who averaged 9.4 points per game and Jim Moran (6'6", 210) who averaged 4.9 points per game.

Two new players this year are David Lutes (6'7", 180) and Richard Ivy (6'7", 215).

Lutes, from Hammond High School, led his team to a 22-2 season and a top 5 state ranking last year. He had 18 and 36 percent shooting average from the field and a 71 percent average from the free throw line.

Ivy, from Muncie Northside, averaged 17 points per game and pulled down 6.3 rebounds per game.

Russell said Lutes and Ivy are "the two best freshmen ever to join the program at IPFW."

The starting lineup will probably be made up of Lutes and Allen Long at the guard position, Faller and Moran at forward and Nissen at center, Russell said.

Russell has been at IPFW for two years. In his first year at IPFW, the team went 16-12 last year, the team went 18-10.

Intramurals offer sports to those with limited time

By BRAD BERGGOETZ

Staff Writer
Many students have a great interest in taking part in some form of sports but do not have the time to dedicate themselves to it because of school and/or their job.

Usually what happens to these people is that they forget what it feels like to be physically active and they gradually slide into a boring sedentary life. If you are familiar with this situation then the Intramural program might be the answer.

Intramurals provides students with the opportunity to participate in a sport where the primary emphasis is not to win but to have a good time competing against others and forget into shape.

The only requirements needed to participate in Intramurals is to be enrolled at IPFW for at least 3 credit hours and to have paid the student services fee.

Currently competition in 7 events is taking place. The events include flag football, volleyball, racquetball, billiards, card and tripe rules volleyball and 3 on 3 basketball.

Starting next semester basketball, table tennis, bench press, coed softball.

But since this program is primarily for the students it was felt that they should have a better voice in how the program was run. So in just the intramural council was formed.

This year the council consists of four students: Lisa Shoben, Kris Espy, Craig Fox and Loren Lebert.

They handle all the business, make and post the schedules and design the tournaments and keep track of all the results.

The entry duties for each sport are available at the Intramural office in the Multipurpose Building. It is up to the individual or team manager to sign up for the activity in the intramural office. It is also up to the teams and individuals to get the rest of the contents to the office.

There is one major problem with the program this year. Although a lot of people signed up, the events are not being completed. Usually by this time there have been a few champions named. So far this year in events have been completed.

A few of them have coasted in. There are no officials, setting up the playing times, the intramural council makes all the decisions and it is up to the teams and individuals to get together single or double elimination tournament depending on how many entries there are and how much time is available.

The director of the intramural program is IPFW volleyball coach Arnie Bell.

Freshmen the key to women's basketball season

By KRISTINE FITZGERALD

Staff Writer

This is definitely recruiting year for the IPFW women's basketball team.

Kavanaugh is leading the Mastodons into their second season of NCAA Division II competition and their first season of Great Lakes Valley Conference play.

IPFW opens its season Nov. 24 at home against Northern Kentucky. The Mastodons will open conference play Jan. 10 at St. Joseph's.

Seven top-notch high school recruits will complement seven returning veterans in what Kavanaugh expects to be a winning combination.

Returning to this year's team are All-American candidates Rhonda Unwerth (senior) and Joan Wenning (sophomore).

Also returning are center Clara Troutman, guards Rita Boyle and Bev Miller, guard-forward

Jennie Owen and forward Michelle Faltz.

The Mastodons' new recruits were all top high school players in the area. Starter's Becky Patterson, Northridge's Lisa Zoro, Kimbrey's Lori Miller, Bishop Dugger's Chris Bonhomme, Heritage's Gretchen Abernethy, Yorktown's Stephanie Bean and Lakeland's Angie Hungariste all will join IPFW this season.

Patterson, a 5'7 pounder from Southern's sectional and regional championship team, shot 48 percent from the field and 81 percent from the free-throw line for a 17.1 scoring average.

Miller, a 5'9 forward, averaged 16.4 points per game as a senior, shooting 41 percent from the field and 73 percent from the line.

Unwerth began playing basketball in high school.

"My brothers played basketball a lot, which influenced me. I was the tomboy of the family," and being that tomboy has paid off, and the team hopes will continue to help as the women's basketball team faces Northern Kentucky in their season opener.

"They also have a girl up for All-American and a quick guard named Clara Troutman. We think we can put it together well. I've been so happy."

Senior ready for opener

By TIMOTHY STAFFWIRE

It is a potential division II, NCAA, All-American candidate. She has scored more points in her past than any female or male at IPFW. Her name is Rhonda Unwerth and her game is basketball.

Unwerth spent her freshman year at Indiana Tech where she averaged 15 points a game and had 147 rebounds for the season.

During her past two seasons, at IPFW she has shot 51 percent from the field—53 points. Unwerth ended her season with an impressive 534 points (202 aye and 1 247 rebounds). It is these statistics that make Unwerth a potential All-American.

"All-American is just a name," she said. "It would mean a lot to me, but I would remember this year more if we could win our tournament."

Winning the tournament could be a real challenge with only two seniors, co-captains Unwerth and Joan Wenning.

"This year is kind of a rebuilding year. But we look good for it," said Unwerth. "We have better incoming freshmen than I've ever seen."

The IPFW women's volleyball team delivered quite a 40th birthday present to head coach Arnie Bull this past weekend by winning the Great Lakes Valley Conference Tournament at Saint Joseph's College.

The championship was of particular significance because it marks the first time an IPFW athletic team has won a conference team title since IPFW's induction into the GLVC. And it couldn't have come in a more dramatic fashion.

In the championship match, the Mastodons shocked Lewis University 15-9, 15-8, 15-3. Lewis had beaten IPFW the night before 15-7, 15-15, 15-11.

Led by Clara Schortgen (two aces), Conette Saylor, and Linda Shank, who were all named first team all-tournament, the Mastodons remained unbeaten, despite the opening night loss to the Flyers.

"We were very confident going into the final against Lewis, because Friday we were doing a good job but were executing poorly," said coach Bull. "There wasn't a moment we didn't think we could take 'em."

And in doing so, the Mastodons defeated the two-time defending champs.

"We wanted the conference so bad, ever since the beginning of the season, and so when the time had come and the opportunity presented itself we took advantage," said freshman Kristie Kelly, whose play was characteristic of coach Bull's youth movement that has paid such wealthy dividends.

"We were tired from the traveling, and when we got Lewis again, it was simply mind over matter, not to mention the revenge factor."

Revenge indeed, for the championship-round rematch against the Flyers saw a new Mastodon team, more spirited and more aggressive, and the Mastodons flustered and then defeated the Lewis attack.

"I think this is a tremendous experience for our three seniors (Schortgen, Saylor, and Lisa Sheehan) who, like me, have been here since the beginning and worked their tails off for four years and I think this is quite fitting for them," said Bull. "I also think it means a lot to the university."

En route to the title the Mastodons also defeated Bellarmine, Kentucky Wesleyan, and Indiana Central. Their post-season tournament bid possibilities hang in the balance this week as the Mastodons close out their season this weekend with a four-way, two-day tournament at the Multipurpose Building involving Northern Kentucky, Grand Valley State, and Miami St. Joseph's. Tourney play begins Friday at 6 p.m. and concludes Saturday.

Also this week, junior Cindy Horst was named Academic All-District, and will now be in the running for Academic All-American.

Linda Shank tries to catch her breath during the Lewis match of the Great Lakes Valley Conference tournament. The Mastodons lost to Lewis Friday and then avenged the loss in the title game Saturday.
